Overview of the Femicide Report

The Minnesota Coalition for Battered Women (MCBW) tracks homicides in which the known or suspected perpetrator was a current or former intimate partner or the homicide is the result of domestic violence between current or former intimate partners. This includes family members, friends, and interveners who are killed as a result of the domestic violence being perpetrated by a current or former intimate partner.

History of the Report

For over 25 years, MCBW has been producing the annual Femicide Report. The information contained within these 26 years of reports is overwhelming in terms of the numbers of individual deaths that are recorded. The reports list the number of people killed, however they do not reveal the enormous number of people impacted by those deaths, nor do the reports reflect the hundreds of thousands of individuals who, across these years, have experienced domestic violence and survived.

What the Report Measures

In 1989, MCBW began collecting the names of women killed by domestic violence. The report has always recorded the deaths of women killed by current or former boyfriends and husbands. Over time, the report has evolved in terms of the definition of which deaths were included in the report. The report has expanded to include anyone killed due to domestic violence between current or former intimate partners. This includes the homicides between lesbian, gay, bi-sexual, and/or transgender current and former intimate partners, as well as cases of men killed by their current and former intimate partners. The report also documents the deaths of other family members, friends, neighbors, interveners, and bystanders who are killed due to domestic violence between current or former intimate partners.

Since 1993, the report has included those killed as a result of being used in prostitution or sex trafficking. These deaths are included because MCBW recognizes prostitution and sex trafficking as a system of violence against women and children. These numbers were tracked separately for a number of years but are now included in the general count.

While there has been some fluctuation over the years, MCBW is working to maintain a consistent definition regarding what is included in the Femicide Report. In recent years the report has consistently listed people killed in Minnesota due to violence by a current or former intimate partner.

What the Report Does Not Measure

The definition of domestic violence in Minnesota law is broader than the definition that we use for this report. In the report, MCBW measures the number of people killed in Minnesota due to violence by a current or former intimate partner. The legal definition of domestic violence is physical violence or threats of physical violence between a family or household member. This includes violence between any family members or household members: adult child to parent, between cousins, roommates who have no intimate relationship, uncles who kill nieces, and parents who kill children. The Femicide Report focuses on one section of that broader definition of domestic violence. MCBW specifically looks at those killed by current or former intimate partners and as a result of domestic violence between current or former intimate partners.

Why do we limit our definition? While all of these homicides are tragic and there are many similarities, MCBW has expertise in intimate partner abuse. We hope that by limiting this report to the intimate partner definition and looking at those deaths in light of the research that has been done about lethality and risk factors for that specific population, we may find information to help improve our work to end domestic violence.

MCBW also only measures those killed in Minnesota. Sometimes a person from Minnesota is temporarily residing in another state and is killed while living there. That person would not be included in our count. Conversely, someone from Illinois or Wisconsin or New Jersey may be visiting Minnesota and be killed by their intimate partner while in Minnesota. We do include that homicide in our count. The reason we make this distinction is twofold. First, we do not have the capacity to monitor the homicides that occur in other states. Second, we gather the Femicide Report information in part to look at what we can do here in Minnesota to improve our work on domestic violence issues. In recent years, we have also included cases where the victim’s body is found in Minnesota or where we have reason to believe the homicide occurred in Minnesota, even if the body was found in a different state.

Limitations of the Report

We rely on public information to create this report. In the early days of the report our sole source of information was media reporting. That has expanded to include public police records, as well as the growing volume of information found on social media.

We use the phrase “at least” when describing the number of people killed each year. We cannot be certain we have not missed some deaths since we rely on public records, primarily news accounts. No state or federal agency collects comprehensive data on domestic homicides. In addition, the murders of women and children of color, Native American people, immigrant and refugee women and children, those living in poverty, people with disabilities, rural women, lesbian/gay/bisexual/transgender people, and those exploited in prostitution and sex trafficking may be underreported in our listing as they frequently go unreported in mainstream media.

While we record all homicides that are a result of domestic violence between current or former intimate partners, we provide yearly comparison information on a series of factors exclusively concerning murdered women. We limit this analysis to women killed by intimate partners because we are looking at the research that has been done on risk and lethality factors for women in abusive relationships. It may be that men face the same risk and lethality factors in abusive relationships but to our knowledge, that research has not been done.

The information that MCBW tracks is not research but rather a compilation of information gathered from public sources. We gather this information to bear witness to those killed, to raise public awareness of domestic violence, and to help inform our work. This report is not a research report. One example of this limitation is in regard to tracking the rate of suicides committed by perpetrators after committing homicide. For a number of years approximately 50% of the domestic violence homicides of adult women also involved the perpetrator then committing suicide. The last two years show a small decrease. These numbers are significantly higher than the homicide-suicide rate reported nationally. What we don’t know, and what this report does not address, is why there is a difference and what the recent decrease means. MCBW is not a research agency. We present this information in the hopes of raising questions and opening the door to deeper conversations.

Overview of 2014

The number of Minnesotans killed due to domestic violence varies from year to year. We have seen yearly lows in the teens and highs in the 40s. Last year 38 Minnesotans were murdered due to domestic violence. This year, the number is lower. At least 23 Minnesotans were killed due to violence from a current or former intimate partner.

At least 16 women
Were murdered in cases where the suspected, alleged, or convicted perpetrator was a current or former husband, boyfriend, or male intimate partner.

At least 5 friends, family members or interveners
Were murdered in domestic violence-related situations.

At least 2 men
Were murdered in a case where the suspected, alleged, or convicted perpetrator was a current or former intimate partner.

At least 19 minor children
Were left motherless due to domestic violence murders.

Note: At the time this report was completed, MCBW was reviewing four additional cases. These deaths occurred in 2014 but MCBW is waiting for information on whether the deaths would be officially ruled homicides versus accidental or natural causes, and information on the nature of the relationship between the victim and suspected perpetrator. Once full information is public, MCBW will update this report and the revised report will be made available through MCBW’s website. www.mcbw.org

Red Flags for Batterer Lethality

In this report, we pay special attention to women murdered by intimate partners, as the majority of women murdered in the United States and Minnesota are murdered by their current or former intimate partners. Various tools to assess for high risk or potential lethality have been developed based on research of women killed by their intimate partners. It is impossible to predict with certainty which batterers will become lethal to their victims. All batterers should be viewed as potentially deadly, though there are well-documented indicators of lethality of which everyone should be aware. Included in the factors that have been identified as possible lethality indicators are: separation, extended history of domestic violence or other violence, pregnancy, threats or fantasies of homicide or suicide, access to a firearm, threats to use a weapon, stalking, attempted strangulation, forced sex, extreme jealousy, and control of daily activities.

We look at the homicide cases in Minnesota and see whether information was known regarding key lethality factors. MCBW specifically focuses on four lethality factors:

- the victim’s attempts to leave the abuser;
- previous threats to kill the victim;
- perpetrator access to firearms; and
- perpetrator’s history of violence.

MCBW has been looking at these four lethality factors since 2006. For the past nine years, these lethality factors were present in a significant number of cases. We would expect that a more complete analysis of public records and interviews with friends and family of the victims would yield further information on other cases and further information on other red flags.

For each homicide case there is much to be learned from the individual circumstances as the circumstances surrounding each death are complex and unique. We look at the key lethality factors with the expectation that this information is useful to inform public policy and intervention strategies.

There were 16 women murdered in Minnesota in 2014 by their intimate partners.
Victim’s Attempts to Leave the Abuse: While conventional wisdom persists that leaving an abuser will always make a battered women safer, separation often increases the risks of further harm, as batterers “step up” their efforts to control or intimidate the victim. In 2014, 5 of the 16 cases of homicide occurred after the woman had left the relationship or when she was attempting to leave. This year the percentage of cases where it was known that the victim had left or was attempting to leave is lower, 31% of the cases. This statistic has been consistent for the past few years between 47 – 67%. In many of the cases, information is not known as to whether the victim was planning on leaving. Attempting or planning to leave a relationship does continue to be a significant factor when assessing lethality. Preparing to leave a relationship may be one of the most dangerous times for battered women.

Angel Lowe was attempting to end her relationship with boyfriend, Marc Bakambia when she was killed. On August 6, Marc Bakambia assaulted Angel and dragged her out of a car by her hair. Angel told her mother she “feared for her life” and that she was so afraid that she “pretended like she was dead.” Four days later, on August 10th, Angel Lowe was strangled to death by Bakambia.

Text messages on Angel's phone show she had broken up with Bakambia the day before she was found dead. Marc Bakambia has been indicted by a grand jury on one count of first-degree murder involving domestic abuse and three counts of second-degree murder.
Threats to Kill the Victim: Threats by the abuser to kill the victim are among the most reliable indicators of lethality and are the most often overlooked by the criminal and civil justice systems. A review of the media reports of the 2014 murders does not reveal much information about threats to kill. We know that in at least 3 instances, the woman had experienced threats to kill and it is possible that threats to kill may have been part of the prior abuse in other cases.

Access to Firearms:
In 2014, 9 of the 16 (56%) domestic violence homicides were committed with firearms. While the percentage of domestic violence homicides using firearms fluctuates from year to year, murder with firearms is the most frequent weapon of choice and firearms were used in about 50% of the documented domestic violence homicides (Of women killed - 52% in 2011, 50% in 2012, 42% in 2013, and 56% in 2014) supporting the studies showing that possession of firearms can increase the risk of lethality. In light of current debates regarding Miranda Schunk had a protection order against her ex-boyfriend, Kevin Evans. In violation of that order, Evans went to Miranda’s apartment and repeatedly stabbed her, inflicting fatal wounds to her head, chest and abdomen. Ten days prior to the stabbing, Miranda had filed for the order for protection. In her petition, Miranda stated, “I am really afraid that [Evans] will follow through with his threats and do serious harm to me, at times I am afraid to leave my home.” The order detailed the abuse which included daily threats of violence, stalking, physical violence including being slapped and punched in the face, as well as spray painting derogatory remarks on her apartment building, and previously attempting to enter Miranda’s apartment armed with a knife. The day before the stabbing, Miranda reported to police that Evans had violated the protective order and was threatening to slit her throat and put a bullet in her head. A friend of Miranda’s, who lived in the building, said Evans had been calling her all day trying to contact Miranda.

On the day of her death, Miranda planned to leave the state and move down south to her family with the help of her friend. The friend reported that Evans had found out about the plan, gotten a hold of Miranda’s address book, and had started calling the friend. He told the friend that he knew her address and told her he’d stab her, her children and Miranda if she helped Miranda leave.

Angel Linderman, of Lake City, was shot to death by her boyfriend, Tanner Rix, on September 9, 2014. Rix called 911 around noon from Baldwin, Wisconsin to report a shooting injury in the car he was driving. Police found Angel’s body in the car, covered with a tarp. Autopsy results confirmed that Angel had been shot hours prior to the 911 call. Rix has been charged with felony counts of 1st degree intentional homicide, hiding a corpse, and possession of a firearm by a felon. Rix had two felony warrants for drug crimes and unauthorized possession of a firearm.
guns and gun control legislation, it is helpful to consider these statistics. When there is a history of domestic violence, we should be looking at the question of access to firearms.

Observations about 2014 Homicides

Complexity of cases: One of the challenges in effectively preventing and intervening around domestic violence is the complexity of issues that exist within individual’s lives and relationships. Domestic violence victims may be living in poverty, may struggle with issues of chemical dependency or with mental health issues, or may have other obstacles and barriers that they face. Each issue can limit a victim’s options and may limit the resources that are available to them and their family. Many prevention and intervention strategies are designed to address each of these issues in isolation from the others. For example, chemical dependency issues may be dealt with separate from the domestic violence; job training and economic assistance programs are not typically integrated with domestic violence programs. To improve prevention and intervention work, we must find ways to deal with all of the complexities that are a part of people’s lives and relationships. Domestic violence victims need holistic approaches that work for them and their families.

- Timothy Hendricks was on a conditional jail release for a criminal charge where he pointed a rifle at his 13-year-old nephew.
- A woman he had been staying with reported that Hendricks told her that he was going to kill his girlfriend, Michelle Ploetz. He had also threatened to hurt himself.
- John Ploetz, Michelle’s father, tried three times to get Hendricks committed because he feared Hendricks might kill him or his family.
- Hendricks’ sister had tried “more than 40 times” to have him hospitalized for addiction and mental health issues. Each time he was sent home with medication and was never admitted.

On April 16th, John Ploetz was driving his daughter Michelle and Timothy Hendricks home after a dinner. Hendricks shot Michelle in the head while their 8-month old son was in a car seat beside her. Hendricks also shot at Michelle’s father several times as he tried to intervene. Michelle died two days later.

Hendricks has been convicted of second-degree murder in the death of Michelle Ploetz and second-degree attempted murder of her father John Ploetz. He was sentenced to 32 years in prison.
Murder-Suicide in Elderly Relationships: Murder-suicides in the United States among people 55 and older have increased from 21 percent in 2002 to 25 percent in 2011 of the total murder-suicides, according to the Violence Policy Center. In 2014, 4 of the 16 adult women murdered by their intimate partners were over the age of 55. In each of these instances, the perpetrator also committed suicide (Doris Doust, Beverly Gongoll, Susan James, and Lorraine Swor). While murder-suicides involving older couples are often categorized as “suicide pacts” or “mercy killings,” research shows that in majority of murder-suicides among older couples, the victim is not aware of the plan and that over 95% of the perpetrators in these cases are the male intimate partners. It is important that outreach and services provided to survivors of domestic violence by various systems recognize the complexities, and cultural and social nuances, of working with older survivors.

Challenge to Minnesota Communities

Domestic violence and domestic homicide have a devastating effect on every person living in Minnesota. Each of the victims whose story is told here was someone’s daughter, son, mother, father, sister, brother, family member, intimate partner, friend, neighbor, or co-worker.

We pledge to remember the women, children, men, family members, and friends who die each year from domestic violence.

Our challenge to the community is to not let these deaths go unnoticed but rather to use these brutal murders as a springboard for action.

While we have research and tools that can assist us in identifying the people most likely to reoffend and those most likely to engage in high risk and lethal behaviors, nothing can predict with 100% accuracy the batterers who will seriously injure or kill. Some of the women injured and killed in Minnesota each year were so isolated or so disconnected that they never told anyone what was happening, and no one had any information about the abuse. Many of these women, however, did interact with our legal system, our medical system, our mental health system or they reached out to family, friends or community members. It is precisely in those cases where we can start to make a difference. We can learn from the tragic loss of life by taking action towards meaningful change.

Over the past 35 years, we have learned much about domestic violence. Our laws have improved; our advocacy and justice systems and the personnel within those systems have learned, changed and improved how they respond to domestic violence; we talk with our children about healthy relationships and about domestic violence. We applaud all of those efforts but we can do even better. That is the challenge we name for ourselves and for all of Minnesota.

Recommendations for the Community

While the ultimate responsibility for these murders rests with the perpetrators alone, opportunities for meaningful intervention in many of these cases were missed. Especially in the cases in which the victim reached out for help or the perpetrator was known to be dangerous, we should examine the reasons why our systems ultimately failed to protect those victims from lethal violence.

Safety is a Foundational Issue: Safety is a fundamental human right and an essential building block for stable communities. Safety must be addressed and considered not just when dealing with legal system policies but when looking at any policy. When discussing how we provide quality education, we must make sure that children are safe in order that they be ready to learn. When looking at ways to stimulate the business economy, we must make sure that employees are safe at home so they are able to be present and productive at work. We must prioritize safety on every level.

Assess Batterer Lethality at Every Opportunity: Comprehensive and ongoing screening and assessments for domestic violence should be the norm with all systems. In every circumstance in which a battered woman or abuser encounters the criminal justice system, the housing and human services systems, the medical/mental health system, the civil or family court, or an advocacy program, a concerted effort should be made to screen for domestic violence and assess potential lethality, risk and potential re-offense. Many excellent assessment tools exist and most rely on multiple opportunities for disclosure throughout a system. In some cases, a review of public records could assist in assessing for high risk or lethality. Minnesota has developed a number of tools and models for assessing risk including the Blueprint for Safety and various Minnesota counties have developed specific coordinated community responses for screening. Criminal proceedings do not represent the sole opportunity to assess batterer lethality or risk of re-offense. When battered women seek protection orders, are involved in family court proceedings, or seek mental health or medical services, screening should happen. The screening should not just be at times and places where previously identified victims come in contact with a provider. Providers and agencies should be assessing for domestic violence with everyone, looking for both potential perpetrators and victims. Assessment and screening is only the first step. Appropriate responses to disclosures of information, quality referrals and assistance are needed. Information should be shared in safe ways that prioritize victim self-determination. Screening and assessment are the initial steps to good response.

Strengthen Partnerships: Assessment tools provide information that can and should be used to fashion meaningful responses to the individuals and families. This means we need to have strong partnerships that include the various agencies, systems, and community based organizations. Each organization has a role to play in order to achieve effective intervention. We need to have sufficient and appropriate resources to effectively apprehend, monitor, and, when necessary, incarcerate dangerous batterers. We need to have sufficient and appropriate resources to support families in gaining and maintaining safety. Law enforcement, the courts, battered women’s advocacy programs, schools, public benefits programs, and public health clinics - all struggle to meet the public safety needs of the community with limited resources. We need coordinated and holistic approaches that address the individual realities of victim’s lives. While having a strong coordinated criminal justice system response is important, those criminal justice system partnerships need to expand and include those working in related systems such as the medical and educational systems as well as community based services such as those working on homelessness and economic justice issues. An investment in the whole spectrum of public safety systems is necessary to reduce domestic violence in our communities.

Community-wide Investment: Effective intervention in domestic violence cases and improved identification of high risk and lethal offenders are not the full answer. We must commit to prevention efforts to stop the violence before it starts. It is critical to stem the incidents of domestic violence by creating an environment where everyone knows that violence will not be tolerated and where healthy, respectful and violence free relationships are the norm for everyone.

Everyone must see domestic violence as their issue. Almost half of the victims whose deaths are documented in the Femicide Reports did not have any interactions with the criminal justice system. However, many of them had reported the abuse to their friends, family members, employers, and others in their communities. A successful response to domestic violence can only be achieved with the investment of an entire community. Whether as a parent, a partner, within the workplace, or in neighborhoods, we all need to talk about domestic violence and work to create healthy communities where domestic violence is not accepted or tolerated. If we fail to keep safety as a top priority, women will continue to be killed and our communities destabilized.

Beverly Gongoll was found dead in her home on April 8, 2014. Her husband, Kenneth Gongoll, 62, was also found in the home with her. Both died of apparent gunshot wounds. Authorities believe that Kenneth Gongoll first killed his wife before turning the gun on himself in a murder-suicide. They had two adult children together and were married for several decades.

Michelle Ploetz was shot in the head by her boyfriend, Timothy Hendricks, 19, while their 8-month old son was in a car seat beside her. Michelle Ploetz died two days later. Michelle’s father told authorities that Michelle met Hendricks for dinner so that he could see their child. Michelle’s father accompanied them out of concern for his daughter’s safety. Over dinner, Michelle Ploetz and her father told Hendricks that he needed to get into a treatment program. They also discussed meeting the following week so that Hendricks again could visit his son. After the dinner, Michelle’s father was driving the group home when Hendricks shot Michelle in the backseat. Hendricks also shot at Michelle’s father several times as he tried to intervene.

At the time of the murder, Hendricks was on a conditional jail release for a January charge where he pointed a rifle at his 13-year-old nephew. A woman he had been staying with in the days prior to the homicide reported Hendricks had told her that he was going to kill Michelle. He had also threatened to hurt himself. Michelle’s father had tried three times to get Hendricks committed because he feared Hendricks might kill him or his family. Hendricks’ sister had tried “more than 40 times” to have him hospitalized for addiction and mental health issues. Each time he was sent home with medication and was never admitted.

Hendricks was convicted of one count of second-degree murder in the death of Michelle Ploetz and one count of second-degree attempted murder of her father, 45-year-old John Ploetz. He was sentenced to 32 years in prison.

On August 6, four days before Angel’s death, her ex-boyfriend, Marc Bakambia, 28, was arrested and charged with domestic abuse and interfering with a 911 call after he allegedly assaulted her and dragged her out of a car by her hair. Angel told her mother she “feared for her life” and that she was so afraid that she “pretended like she was dead”.

On August 10th, Angel Lowe was strangled to death in her West St. Paul home that she used to share with Bakambia. Text messages on Angel's phone show she had broken up with Bakambia the day before she was found dead. A Dakota County grand jury indicted Bakambia on one count of first-degree murder involving domestic abuse and three counts of second-degree murder. Residents of their apartment complex said that they had reported the couple for violent fights in the past. Police had been called to the address at least four times in the past year. | December 29, 2014 |

Less than two weeks after Miranda Schunk obtained a protection order against her 49 year-old, ex-boyfriend, Kevin Scott Evans, he returned to her apartment and repeatedly stabbed her, inflicting wounds to her head, chest and abdomen. Miranda was taken to Regions Hospital where she died on Monday, December 29th. Ten days prior to the stabbing, Miranda Schunk filed an order for protection which prohibited Evans from being in proximity to Miranda. In her petition, Miranda stated, “I am really afraid that [Evans] will follow through with his threats and do serious harm to me, at times I am afraid to leave my home.” The order detailed the abuse which included daily threats of violence, stalking, physical violence including being slapped and punched in the face, destruction of property including throwing medication and pictures of her children into the river, as well as spray painting derogatory remarks on her apartment building, and previously attempting to enter Miranda’s apartment armed with a knife. The day before the stabbing, Miranda reported to police that Evans had violated the protective order and was threatening to slit her throat and put a bullet in her head. A friend of Miranda’s, who lived in the building, said Evans had been calling her all day trying to contact Miranda.

On the day of her death, Miranda planned to leave the state and move down south to her family. Miranda’s best friend had driven up from Texas to help her relocate; she arrived in Minnesota a few hours after her death. The friend reported that Evans had found out about the plan, gotten ahold of Miranda’s address book, and had started calling the friend. He said he knew her address and told her he'd stab her, her children and Miranda if she helped Miranda leave.

Miranda is known to have experienced homelessness in the past. Evans’ past criminal history includes 2nd degree murder, domestic assault, and aggravated robbery.

The Minnesota Coalition for Battered Women publishes The Femicide Report, a report on those murdered in our state, to educate the public about the lethality of domestic violence. We report on the murders that occur at the hands of abusers to direct attention to the challenges faced by all of the women and children who are living with abuse and as a call to all Minnesotans to come together because it takes the entire community to end violence.

The 2014 Femicide Report is compiled from news accounts. Please contact MCBW if we have missed a death or if you have updated or more complete information on any femicide.

We ask that the Minnesota Coalition for Battered Women be credited when information from this report is used.
